

Full-time Tenure and Tenure-track Positions

The Columbia University School of Social Work invites nominations and applications for multiple tenured and tenure-track positions. Appointments are preferred at the rank of Associate Professor and Professor.

For more than 110 years, the Columbia University School of Social Work has educated professionals for careers in practice, policy, and administration. Located in New York City, the School offers Master's and doctoral programs that are nationally and internationally recognized for their excellence. Its signature curriculum features multidisciplinary courses taught by leading scholars and practitioners and rich field education. It prepares students for careers in clinical and community practice, social policy, and social enterprise administration. More information about the School can be found on its website at <http://www.columbia.edu/cu/ssw/>.

The School seeks faculty who can teach and are scholars in:

- Advanced clinical practice
- Social work management and organizational innovation
- Community-focused practice and programming across system levels in the context of human rights, diversity, and social justice
- Social policy with an emphasis on health policy

The date of appointment for the multiple positions may begin January 1, 2011 or July 1, 2011. Candidates must have a Ph.D. in social work, public administration, business administration or a relevant social science discipline. All candidates must apply through Columbia University's Recruitment of Academic Personnel System ("RAPS") in order to be considered by following this link:

academicjobs.columbia.edu/applicants/Central?quickFind=53567

Review of applicants will begin immediately.

Columbia University is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer.